

THE BIG READ

Reading Luke's Gospel

What sort of focus do you think the author wishes to impress on the reader?

Is he telling one story or many?

Does the author's voice or style of writing change throughout the book?

In what ways does the author make the central character(s) vivid and real?

What is Luke's gospel? Can we sum up his approach to what he is presenting in his account?

Where do you think the author's sympathies lie?

Where does the author write with his most skill?

Has reading the book deepened, challenged or modified your understanding in any way? Has it opened a door into new explorations and new areas of interest?

Was the book easy to read or difficult? Why?

What are the things that keep us interested in the story, and how does the author achieve this?
